* Social security (tax ID), driver's license and passport numbers, and citizenship and occupational information may be collected pursuant to Treasury Department anti-money laundering rules when the buyer is an entity and is not using a bank loan to purchase residential real property. These Treasury Department rules are designed to uncover the identity of the natural person behind the entity. This information will be required to given to the title company when the transaction involves all of the following:

Property is within the counties of Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco, San Mateo or Santa Clara

Sales price is $300,000 or more

Buyer is a "Legal Entity" such as a corporation, LLC or partnership

Property is a 1 to 4 unit residential property (including condos)

Some part of the purchase is made using ANY wired funds, cashier's check, certified check, traveler's check, personal check, business check, money order in any form, or a virtual currency (such as Bitcoin)

Purchase is done without a bank loan or similar forms of external financing

Since a transaction will typically not close without the information, when required, our brokerage may assist the title company in working with an entity buyer to gather it.

California law under the CCPA defines "personal information" broadly.

However, there are some exceptions. Personal information does not include:

Publicly available information from government records.

De-identified or aggregated consumer information.

Information excluded from the CCPA's scope, like:

Health or medical information covered by the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA) and the California Confidentiality of Medical Information Act (CMIA) or clinical trial data;

- Personal information covered by certain sector-specific privacy laws, including the Fair Credit Reporting Act (FRCA), the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (GLBA) or California Financial Information Privacy Act (FIPA), and the Driver's Privacy Protection Act of 1994.

II. Where do we receive information from?

Our company receives information directly from you

Our real estate business receives personal information primarily for the purpose of transacting real property sales and purchases. Nearly all of the information which we directly collect about you is received from the physical or electronic documents that constitute the real estate transaction. For example, the real property purchase agreement will contain your name, signature, purchase price and other personal information. Or, for example, a seller is required by law and contract to give the buyer various disclosures concerning a range of issues associated with the property, some of which information may constitute personal information. Once these documents come into our possession, by law a broker must maintain such record for three years. Typically, we retain our files for a longer period.

Cookies and Other Technologies

Our website and some of our online products and services, email messages and advertisements may use cookies, log files and other technologies to collect information about your use of our website, products and services and third-party websites that have a business relationship with our service providers. A cookie is a small data file that is sent to your browser from a website's servers and stored on your computer's hard drive, and is used to store information such as the name of your Internet service provider, your Internet Protocol (IP) address, the website that referred you, your general geographic location, the pages you request, and the dates and times of those requests.

Most internet browsers are initially set to accept cookies. If you prefer, you may set your browser so that it refuses cookies or alerts you when cookies are being created on your hard drive. You should be aware that by not accepting cookies you may impair your ability to use certain portions of our website, products and services.

Our company receives some information indirectly

Multiple Listing Service (“MLS”). An MLS is a database of properties for sale that is available and disseminated to and accessible by all other real estate agents who are participants or subscribers to the MLS. Property information submitted to an MLS describes the price, terms and conditions under which the seller’s property is offered for sale. It is likely that a significant number of real estate practitioners in any given area are participants or subscribers to an MLS. The MLS may also be part of a reciprocal agreement to which other MLSs belong. Real estate agents who belong to other MLSs that have reciprocal agreements with the MLS in which the property is placed may also have access to the information submitted the MLS. The MLS may further transmit listing information to internet sites that post property listings online. The placing of a listing on the MLS allows wide exposure of the property to the marketplace which tends to impact the sales price.

Title Companies and Escrows. These service providers are essential to real estate transactions. Not only do title and escrow companies receive information, but they supply invaluable assistance in providing information about all aspects of a real estate transaction to brokers and agents.

Lenders and mortgage brokers. Typically, agents and brokers will be in contact throughout the transaction with a lender or representative of a lender to keep informed on the progress of the lending process. During this process an agent may receive personal information relating to the loan, the loan application, the buyer’s qualifications for the loan, documents requested by the lender, or reasons why a loan is being denied, approved or delayed.

City, county, state and other agencies of government. Many aspects of a real estate transaction rely on information received from a variety of government sources. For example, the assessor will typically provide their estimate of the square footage of the house, among various other types of data concerning the property.

Reporting companies. Reporting companies will access public records for information concerning the property and then provide a summary of the information. This information is not typically considered “personal information.”

Other sources of information. Neighborhood advertising information; real property portals such as Realtor.com; HOA documents from HOAs; appraisers and appraisals; investigators, inspectors and contractors; and legally and contractually required disclosures generated by the seller are other sources of information from which personal information may be collected or received.

III. Use, Sharing and Sale of Personal Information

Use of Personal information

Assistance in buying or selling a house. The primary use of personal information is to help you buy or sell a house. For example, if you are seeking to buy a house, the personal information we collect will help our agents find the right house for you. If you are seeking to sell a house, the information will be used to find a buyer who will purchase your house on the agreed price and terms.

Web technologies. We use cookies and other technologies to verify user information, to make your use of our website, products and services more convenient and to assist in understanding your use of our website, products and services. We also use cookies to measure website activity and generate statistics that allow us to improve the services we provide online.

Additional Uses. We may use the personal information we collect for the following additional business purposes:

To create, maintain, customize and secure the communications between you and us.

To assist in preventing transaction fraud.

To provide, support, personalize, and develop our website, products, and services.

To personalize your online experience with us and to deliver content and product and service offerings relevant to your interests, including targeted offers and ads through our website, third-party sites, and via email or text message (with your consent, where required by law).

For testing, research, analysis, and product development, including to develop and improve our website, products, and services.

To respond to law enforcement requests and as required by applicable law, court order, or governmental regulations.

As described to you when collecting your personal information or as otherwise set forth in the CCPA.

To evaluate or conduct a merger, divestiture, restructuring, reorganization, dissolution, or other sale or transfer of some or all of our company's assets, whether as a going concern or as part of bankruptcy, liquidation, or similar proceeding, in which personal information held by our company is among the assets.

Sharing of personal information and chart

Sharing information to promote the sale or purchase of homes. The sharing of information is integral to the process of buying or selling a house. First and foremost, we will share information with other agents and brokers, and sellers and buyers. It is only through the sharing of information that our agents can find the right house for you as a buyer, or if you are a seller, find a buyer who will purchase your house on the agreed price and terms.

Information supplied and received from the Multiple Listing Service ("MLS"). An MLS is both a source of information and a means to share information. As described in the previous section, an MLS is a database of properties for sale that is available and disseminated to and accessible by all other real estate agents who are participants or subscribers to the MLS. Property information submitted to an MLS describes the price, terms and conditions under which the seller's property is offered for sale. An MLS will also act as a repository of information related to properties that have been sold through the MLS.

Since it is likely that a significant number of real estate practitioners in any given area are participants or subscribers to an MLS data, the sharing of MLS will typically be widespread. Moreover, an MLS may also be part of a reciprocal agreement to which other MLSs belong. Real estate agents who belong to other MLSs that have reciprocal agreements with the MLS in which the property is placed may also have access to the information submitted the MLS. The MLS may further transmit listing information to internet sites that post property listing online. The placing of a listing on the MLS allows wide exposure of the property to the marketplace which tends to impact the sales price.

Third parties we commonly share information with. As a real estate brokerage, we may typically share your personal information with the following third parties:

Brokers and agents

Buyers and sellers

Multiple Listing Services

Real estate portals such as Realtor.com

Title companies and escrows

Lenders

Service providers such as inspectors, appraisers or reporting companies

Other third-parties as necessary to complete the transaction

* Social security (tax ID), driver's license and passport numbers, and citizenship and occupational information may be collected pursuant to Treasury Department anti-money laundering rules when the buyer is an entity and is not using a bank loan to purchase residential real property. These Treasury Department rules are designed to uncover the identity of the natural person behind the entity. This information will be required to given to the title company when the transaction involves all of the following:

Property is within the counties of Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco, San Mateo or Santa Clara

Purchase is done without a bank loan or similar forms of external financing

Since a transaction will typically not close without the information, when required, our brokerage may assist the title company in working with an entity buyer to gather it.

Sale of personal information and chart

"Sale" of information through MLS. Membership in the MLS confers benefits to an agent or broker. As part of membership, the agent or broker is bound to place their listings on the MLS and provide various information including pictures, price, terms and the conditions under which the property is offered for sale, unless the seller opts-out. As a member of the MLS, brokers and agents may be eligible to receive commissions offered through the MLS by other brokers. In this sense the placing of a listing on the MLS may constitute a “sale” of information as defined by the CCPA, even though the brokerage does not receive direct financial remuneration from the MLS.

Referrals. With your consent, our company may share your personal information, your name and phone number with other agents and brokers for purposes of referring you to another brokerage. For this we often negotiate a referral fee in line with the traditional model of brokerage referral relationships. Such a fee does constitute a sale.

Other referrals. Referrals other than to agents and brokers do not typically involve a referral fee, since in most residential transactions the taking of a referral fee from a company such as an escrow or title company, mortgage broker, lender, or other settlement service provider is illegal under federal law. Even in those situations where it would be legally permitted, our agents will always disclose and obtain your consent before receiving a referral fee

This table discloses which types of information our company has and has not sold within the last 12 months.
